Technical Director's Notes

When Petal first brought up "James and the Giant Peach" as a play for this summer I was very torn. It's a story that I love, but my thesis for graduate school is my first priority this summer, so I was not planning to be involved this time. I'm glad she persevered, first because I love to work with her and secondly because this show challenged me in ways that I had not yet experienced. This show has been the most technically difficult we have yet attempted since I began working as the technical director in the Sum'Arts program. In addition, this is the largest crew that I have worked with yet with the youngest age! As always though, these young people have put forth a great deal of effort and creativity to make a fantastic show. When people ask me how ~~in the world~~ I can teach backstage technology to so many young people I simply smile and shrug. Actors are necessary to any play, but the tech people can be proud that they are the ones who create the extra sparkle that bring a show truly to life. Every year we begin with a nearly overwhelming list of sets, props, costumes, sounds, and lighting cues that we have only a few short weeks to create. But the crew always goes into this work with such joy and enthusiasm that it makes the list quickly disappear. I am especially proud of this year's crew for being such a positive, hard working bunch!! They made a great team and truly were the magic behind the scenes. Thank you to the crew, their parents, my family and to Petal. As James would say "the whole place seems to be alive with magic."
