DIRECTOR'S NOTE

How do you do a big musical during a Pandemic? Very carefully! After two years of no musical theater, we had to try. Realizing our end product would be challenged, we masked up, cast understudies and did everything possible to combat Covid's stranglehold on our lives. While we do musicals that culminate in delightful community performances, the true value is "in the journey." In our perspective. Something I learned from Gerry Wilson when I arrived in Kodiak 25 years ago. We do these musicals for a sense of "family;" to escape the long, dark months of winter; to combine seasoned performers with beginners who have never before been onstage; to introduce youngsters to their talents, and so much more!

While, at first glance, "The Little Mermaid" might seem a silly cartoon, the right perspective changes everything. A realization of father-daughter relationships, youth yearning to experience the world, the many "characters" who affect our lives for good or bad, familial misunderstandings and loss, yet eventual, loving compromise. As world events have unfolded over the past few weeks, our collective perspective has been affected. Personal priorities are questioned. Abandoning the show might be considered, yet bringing joy into the lives of performers and audience members alike seems more important than ever.

In collecting possible props from various sources, we found ourselves needing a special effects pipe (snarfblat) for one of Ariel's props. The best one we could find was with a citizen in the Ukraine. After ordering, we realized it probably wouldn't come as we watched their invasion crisis begin. We moved on to other sources. Imagine our stunned and heartfelt reaction when the Ukrainian pipe arrived, just days ago. Perspective.

We hope you enjoy the show; we are delighted to become a "part of your world."
